

Changes to the Consumer Price Index beginning with the May 2011 CPI

On June 29, 2011, with the release of the May 2011 Consumer Price Index (CPI), Statistics Canada has updated the basket of goods and services used in the calculation of the Index.

Statistics Canada updates the basket periodically to ensure the CPI's reliability, as it is used for three key purposes: as a measure of inflation; as a statistical series deflator; and as a tool for indexing various public and private transfer payments.

This update introduces a 2009 weighting pattern for the CPI to reflect the latest available information on the consumption patterns of Canadian households. The weights are primarily derived from Statistics Canada's Survey of Household Spending (catalogue no. 62-202-X) and replace the previous 2005 weights.

To allow for the representation of emerging technologies and services in the marketplace, and more accurately reflect the specific goods and services that make up the CPI basket, Statistics Canada made the following changes at the same time it updated the basket:

"Telephone equipment" has been added to the "Communications" class and made publicly available.

A new class, "Multipurpose digital devices", has been created to measure price changes for emerging consumer technologies, such as tablet computers and smartphones. This class appears alongside "Computer equipment and supplies", under "Digital computing equipment and devices".

The class below "Other household services" now includes "Legal services not related to the dwelling", "Funeral services", "Government services", and "Retail club memberships". Weights for these items have, for the first time, been explicitly included in the CPI basket thus, in effect, expanding its coverage and scope. Similarly, "Financial services" now includes "Stock and bond commissions" and "Financial administrative and management fees".

In addition, to enhance the distinction between the goods price index and the services price index, a new published class, "Recreational services", was created. It includes the formerly published "Photographic services" class and other recreational services. Another new class, "Other recreational equipment", was created by splitting it away from what was formerly known as "Other recreational equipment and services".

There are no major changes to price measurement methodologies and the CPI's time base remains 2002 = 100. Also, all currently existing CPI CANSIM tables and vector numbers remain active.

For the sake of accuracy and precision, the names of some existing commodities and commodity groups were revised. Appendix 1 provides a title concordance table, highlighting changes and additions. Appendix 2 illustrates the availability of data, by commodity, commodity groups, and geography, in CANSIM and the CPI publication.
